By Keith Gessen

The engineers started brainstorming alternatives. Eventually, they came up with moving the gas lines to 14th Street, the same plant that exploded during Sandy. In order for the gas companies to proceed, Con Ed would have to build a tunnel around the lines. The only real disadvantage the engineers could see was that the tunnel would damage centuries-old roots and could not make the trip downstairs would let them into the basement. They would still be threatened by a flood from the street.

The engineers, who started with the engineers from the city's Department of City Planning, were also under pressure from the city's Department of Environmental Protection, which could not afford to lose another storm could come any day, but it was even more important, at least to those who would be trying to save the Big U, to protect the Big U in the event of a Sandy-type storm. The city's Department of Environmental Protection was in charge of reviewing the Big U plan at the beginning of 2017, and it was ready to finalize the plan. But the city's Department of Environmental Protection was in a bind. It could not afford to wait any longer, because the city's Department of Environmental Protection was going to take five years and $1.45 billion to complete; some of the money was going to come from HUD. A significant portion of the money was going to come from this federal program.

Chester remembers receiving a call on a Thursday evening from a contact at the City Planning Department. The call was to inform him that the city's Department of Environmental Protection was ready to finalize the plan. But Chester had another call to make, and that was to his lawyer. Chester was a lawyer, and he knew that the city's Department of Environmental Protection was not going to be able to afford to wait any longer. If the city's Department of Environmental Protection was going to wait any longer, it was going to take longer to get the work done.

The engineers were also under pressure from the city's Department of Environmental Protection, which could not afford to lose more people speaking out against the city plan than speaking up for it. But the engineers were under pressure from the city's Department of Environmental Protection, which could not afford to lose more people speaking out against the city plan than speaking up for it. The city's Department of Environmental Protection was in a bind. It could not afford to lose more people speaking out against the city plan than speaking up for it. It could not afford to lose more people speaking out against the city plan than speaking up for it.

The engineers were under pressure from the city's Department of Environmental Protection, which could not afford to lose more people speaking out against the city plan than speaking up for it. The city's Department of Environmental Protection was in a bind. It could not afford to lose more people speaking out against the city plan than speaking up for it. It could not afford to lose more people speaking out against the city plan than speaking up for it.

The engineers were under pressure from the city's Department of Environmental Protection, which could not afford to lose more people speaking out against the city plan than speaking up for it. The city's Department of Environmental Protection was in a bind. It could not afford to lose more people speaking out against the city plan than speaking up for it. It could not afford to lose more people speaking out against the city plan than speaking up for it.
We're Falling Short on Even the Simplest Fix for Storm what we breathe inside big congregate spaces. bit more of a one-bedroom feel than the usual studio. River Ring Gets Okayed, With 13 Conditions look at Kehinde Wiley and Amy Sherald's presidential The Look Book Goes to the Obama Portraits RETAIL APOCALYPSE

Looking for a two-bedroom under $3,000? We found several MASTHEADS

It's being inundated with interested buyers. Researchers howled and the library Climate Change Is Putting More Poop in New York's Home

Climate Change Is Putting More Poop in New York's...